To kick off its capital raise initiative Dunamis Charge Founder and CEO Natalie King, the 1st African American woman electric vehicle manufacturer in the world, presents an insightful breakout session; Dunamis Charge - EV is for Everyone: Why You Should Bet on The Urban Market! and joins panels; The EV Boogie: It's Electric! and The Future of Minority Investment: Democratizing Access during 2022 Equity Crowdfunding Week at TubeScience Studios (655 S Santa Fe Ave, Los Angeles, CA 90021).

King's workshop Wednesday, November 9, 2022; Dunamis Charge - EV is for Everyone: Why You Should Bet on The Urban Market! gives investors insight into Dunamis Charge's origin story with respect to establishing an American-made, American-built, best-in-class product for electric vehicle charging infrastructure that will be deployed throughout the country and international marketplace.

According to the innovative CEO, "My presentation focuses on the benefits of the electric vehicle industry-environmentally, socially, and financially. I demonstrate how Dunamis Charge, with the first black woman EV charger manufacturer on the planet at the helm, is uniquely positioned to take advantage of the billions of slated investment dollars from government and corporate sectors."

ECW2022's The EV Boogie: It's Electric! panel is a conversation among the most innovative electric vehicle manufacturers in existence. The tech stars explore the good, the bad, and the most promising developments of the EV industry. Moderated by Issuance' Darren Marble, King joins Atlis Motor's [AMV] Annie Pratt, Aptera's Chris Anthony, Battle Approved Motors' Chris James, and Eli Electric Vehicles' Cody Dumont.

King also shares her bankable insight in the 2022 Equity Crowdfunding Week's The Future of Minority Investment: Democratizing Access conversation with leading organizations within the technology and investment communities addressing the shortfalls, much-needed changes, and opportunities of investing in minorities. Natalie joins moderator Lorel Scott of StartupStarter and fellow panelists; Include Ventures' Taj Eldridge, Net Capital's Eric Cox II, and Black on the Block's Lanie Edwards.
