The first African American woman-owned Electric Vehicle manufacturer Dunamis Charge announces the participation of its founder and CEO Natalie King in TechTown's Detroit on the Move: Celebrating the Evolution of Black Mobility in honor of Black History Month on February 16, 2023.

Taking place at Wayne State University Industry Innovation Center located at 461 Burroughs St. in Detroit, Michigan, this day-long conference held in person will pay homage to the legacy of Black leaders in the mobility industry while highlighting the current achievements of the new generation of pioneers.

Detroit on the Move: Celebrating the Evolution of Black Mobility will feature Natalie King and other mobility tech trailblazers on panels geared toward mobility-focused entrepreneurs and startups, a business pitch competition for high school standouts, a fireside chat with Dr. Donna Bell, Executive Vice President of Product Creation, Engineering, and Supply Chain at Lordstown Motors, and more.

According to Natalie King, "I'm honored to participate alongside my peers, in this celebration of the evolution of black mobility and look forward to pouring into the next generation of Detroit entrepreneurs.

Made possible with support from Ally, Bank of America, First Merchants Bank, Livegistics, Michigan Economic Development Corporation, New Economy Initiative, and the Ralph C. Wilson, Jr. Foundation, the aim of Detroit on the Move: Celebrating the Evolution of Black

Mobility is to inspire area innovators to come and make Detroit the epicenter of mobility and electrification for decades to come.
